Beth – sounds like jet ski moron's destroyed the net system at the McKay Bay Park. We've vowed to split the cost with the Port Authority to replace the "Watergoat". Do I need to submit something formally to you all showing the cost? Or can I just add it to the summary report when we start? Of course, we'll have an invoice from the manufacturer to support the expense.

Please advise.

Hi Ed,

As we discussed, someone destroyed the water goat. Please see the email below. After discussing it with you and Debbie I confirmed that we (PTB and UES) will cover the cost of replacing the water goat. She is working on getting a quote from the manufacturer/inventor. I will keep you posted on the quote and time for fabrication and installation.

Sincerely,

Subject: Watergoat

Hi Chris,

I have some bad news to share. Someone destroyed the water goat and we are unable to repair and fix it. The guy who makes these can't believe this happened but suggested, the Watergoat was designed to handle the incredible amounts of debris weights so that's not really an issue. We know it works great. The only thing he said we could change as far as design - add extra length so all debris ends up pushing against Southern embankment. Would also use heavier floats for that one time a motorized vessel may come by.

With that said, the cost to make another one will be between 3,00 and 5,000 which isn't in our budget right now but I was thinking of looking at a grant to fund it but that could take a little time. What are your thoughts? I hate that this happened and hasn't happened to any other water goats. Also, we can cancel our meeting at the site on Monday because Mark can't show you how to clean it because it isn't working :-(.

I am so upset that this happened and can't believe someone could do that. Give me a call when you have a few minutes

Yours in Service,
Debbie
